Market Synopsis of Middle East and Africa Nasal Drug Delivery Market:

Market Scenario:

The intra-nasal route of drug administration is becoming popular due to its noninvasive nature thereby reducing pain and threat of infections and allows the patient to self-administer drugs without any help from anyone. Moreover recent research has also pointed its applications related to drug delivery to the brain. Bioavailability of a drug is defined as the proportion of a drug entering the systemic circulation as compared to the dosage. Nasal drug delivery eliminates drug destruction by HCL present in the stomach thereby increasing bioavailability which reduces the dosage of the drug. The reduction in dosage leads to proportional reduction in side effects. Growth of over the counter nasal drugs such as inhalers for common cold is also driving the market.

The market for nasal drug delivery is increasing at a good CAGR due to the above mentioned advantages of nasal drugs. Other market driving factors include ease of administration, growing efficacy of the route due to development of drugs which are absorbed easily from the nasal route and the development of advanced products such as metered dose pressurized containers which deliver a very precise dose.

The market's constraints are irritation of the nasal route and the low dose of the drug that can be delivered as compared to other route of administration. Other constraints includes low awareness and concurrent low popularity of the route which reduces economies of scale in producing these delivery devices. The market for nasal drug delivery has oligopolistic characteristic due to a few dominant players. Thus the power of the sellers is high and there is a premium on most nasal drug delivery products.

Taking all factors into consideration, we expect the Middle East and Africa nasal drug delivery market to reach around $1.59 billion in 2022 growing at a CAGR of 8.1%; this market was worth $1 billion in 2015.
